X. Numb. 90.

THE OBSERVATOR.

gument, That the Emperor's Power will be Exorbitant if he continue King of Spain, er examin'd, as to the Inſtances of Charles V. and Ferdinand II. The Concurrence of land with both thoſe Princes, contributed to their Exorbitant Power. The Authority of the s Hiſtorique, in his Computation of the Forces of the Houſe of Auſtria, defended. They not attempted the Liberties of the Empire ſince the Treaty of Munſter.

From Wedneſday, November 7. to Saturday, November 10. 1711.

Jon. I Muſt deſire you to go on, Maſter, with your Anſwer to our Adverſary's Objections from the Emperor Ferdinand II.

With all my heart, Roger: but I muſt t him in mind that the Exorbitant Power les V. from which he argu'd againſt one being Emperor and King of Spain, was n being ſo great as this Gentleman ima- and that King Henry VIII. of England, ry'd his Aunt, and was in League with ainſt France, contributed much to his Suc- the French King: and therefore after the Pavia, where that King was taken, and of his Nobility and Commanders ſlain, VIII. demanded of the Emperor half the and Cannon taken from the French King, ewiſe that the Duke of Orleans, one of narch's Sons, who was given to the Em- s an Hoſtage, ſhould be ſent to England, that War was made at K. Henry's Charge s the Emperor's: And if this was re- Clarencieux King of Arms was to denounce ainſt Charles V. in the name of the King land. Every one knows, Roger, that to ever ſide K. Henry betook himſelf, he caſt lance; according to the Deviſe which he his Banners, Cui adhæreo præeſt, i. e. Who- take part with prevails. And this he made ven againſt Charles V. for all his Exorbi- wer, and oblig'd him to releaſe both the King and the Pope; as Hollinſhed informs ides what we have from foreign Hiſtorians.

ntrym. That's very remarkable indeed, Maſ- ſhews that our Antagoniſt's Argument ing of force in it; for all the world muſt at her Majeſty's Power is much greater er was poſſeſs'd by Henry VIII. ſince was then a ſeparate Kingdom, and at with him, nor was he fully poſſeſs'd of nor had any of thoſe foreign Plantations ave ſince added ſo much to our Wealth wer; and I ſuppoſe that no body will con- that the Royal Navy of England is four greater than it was in his time. But what ſay to the Objection from the Emperor d II?

That is as little to our Author's purpoſe as g, Roger; for the Hiſtorians of that time , That the Elector Palatine's Pretenſions Crown of Bohemia were diſlik'd by the ectors and Princes of Germany, who fore- the ill Conſequences of that Attempt, are told by Cluverius and others. Beſides, erſally known, that the Elector's Father our King James, and the Highfliers of ; did not approve it, nor give him that ge which he might juſtly have expected, e Proteſtant Intereſt did ſo much depend upon it: ſo that Ferdinand's Victory over that unfortunate Prince was a deſperate Blow to the Proteſtant Religion and the German Liberties. But that was not all: The Elector of Bavaria and the Spaniards under Spinola join'd with Ferdinand; and the Elector of Saxony, tho a Proteſtant, balanc'd ſo long on the Emperor's ſide, and took ſo many Provinces and Towns for him, that it was not in his power afterwards to retrieve it: ſo that the German Proteſtants were oblig'd at laſt to have recourſe to the Swedes and French for Aſſiſtance; by which they reduc'd the Houſe of Auſtria ſo low, that they have never ſince been able to recover it. The Treaty of Munſter, as I have mention'd already, put an end to their Exorbitant Power; and their wings have been ſince further clipt by the Capitulations at every new Election, as the preſent Emperor's are by the laſt. This anſwers another of our Adverſary's Objections, from the Houſe of Auſtria's conquering the Electorate of Bavaria; for the Emperor cannot add that Electorate to his own Domain, but muſt diſpoſe of it by Conſent of the Dyet, and in the mean time is anſwerable to them for his Adminiſtration of it.

Countrym. What d'ye ſay in defence of the Atlas Hiſtorique, Maſter, whoſe Authority is ſo much decry'd by our Adverſary?

Obſ. I'm apt to think, Roger, that he never ſaw it; for 'tis a Book of that Price as I believe he would ſcarce purchaſe, nor do I know whether he underſtands the Language 'tis writ in. I'm ſatisfy'd there's but few of 'em in England; for none will be at the expence of it, but Perſons of more than ordinary Wealth or Curioſity. For the Work it ſelf, 'tis an Undertaking of that Charge, and the Materials are ſo conſiderable, that it could never be carry'd on by a private Purſe: ſo that there is no doubt but moſt of the Princes, whoſe Genealogies are there inſerted, together with the Accounts of their Revenues, Courts, Forces, &c. have contributed towards it in their ſeveral Countries: and of all thoſe things the Author has made ſo curious a Collection, as charms the Eye and informs the Judgment at one and the ſame time; nor have we any where at one view a more inſtructive Collection of antient and modern Hiſtory, Geography, and Genealogy: ſo that the Work is able to anſwer for it ſelf. But were it otherwiſe, the Gentleman might have ſeen that I did not altogether depend on the Authority of that Work for the Power of the Emperor and Empire, but refer'd to the Matricula, which was ſettled by Charles V. himſelf, with the Conſent of the Dyet: And to be ſure a Prince of his Grandure, Wiſdom, and Power, would take care that his Hereditary Dominions ſhould have no injuſtice done 'em in leſſening their Proportions of Men and Mony for the Support of his his Family, whatever he might do with relation to the Empire, which he knew was Elective: For the Hereditary Dominions cannot, without Rebellion, enlarge their Quotas beyond the Proportion there ſettled, to aſſiſt the Houſe of Auſtria in uſurping over the reſt of the Empire. By this Matricula the Tax, call'd the Roman Months, is ſettled, and has not ſince been alter'd, but the Dyet augments the Number of them, as Occaſion requires: So that by comparing the Atlas Hiſtorique's Scheme with the Matricula, any one may find that he has not leſſen'd the Power of the Houſe of Auſtria, but has added to it what they can raiſe for Hungary and Bohemia, &c. which were not ſettled by the Matricula. To this we may add, that the Power of the Houſe of Auſtria has ſuffer'd a conſiderable Diminution ſince that time, by the Loſs of Burgundy, to which they had an Hereditary Right.

Countrym. I thank you, Maſter, for your Information. I ſee your Adverſary can make nothing of his Argument, from the formidable Power of the Emperors Charles V. and Ferdinand II. againſt Charles VI. being both Emperor and King of Spain; ſince it was not by their own Power, but by a Confederacy with the Pope, and other Popiſh Princes, and by the Diviſions among Proteſtants, that they did ſo much endanger the Proteſtant Religion and the Liberties of Germany. Pray what conſiderable Attempts of that nature has the Houſe of Auſtria made ſince that time?

Obſ. I'll give you an Anſwer as to that by and by, Roger, after having inform'd you that all the Electors, except Brandenburg, did threaten War againſt the Elector Palatine, unleſs he renounc'd his Pretenſions to the Crown of Bohemia; and that the Emperor had not only Troops from the King of Spain, as I mention'd before, but likewiſe from the King of Poland, and great Sums of Mony from the Pope towards carrying on that War; whereas the Elector Palatine was not only oppos'd by ſuch formidable Enemies, but deſerted and neglected by his Friends: inſomuch that at the Court of Bruſſels the Spaniards made him the Object of their Jeſts in Farces and Operas, where they brought in a Fellow to ſay, That his Father-in law K. James I. was ſending 100000 Ambaſſadors, and the Dutch 100000 Red Herrings to his Aſſiſtance. For K. James was ſo intent on the Spaniſh Match for his eldeſt Son, that he neglected to relieve his eldeſt Daughter; and inſtead of ſending an Army to aſſiſt his Son-in-law, contented himſelf with putting in a Memorial now and then in his favour by his Ambaſſadors, but rather to prevent his being deſpoil'd of his own Electorate, than to countenance his Pretenſions to the Crown of Bohemia, which he diſapprov'd as a dangerous Precedent, that Crowns ſhould be diſpos'd of by the Peoples Authority; and at the ſame time threaten'd, that if his Son-in-Law would not take his Advice, he would leave him to himſelf, as indeed he did, which compleated the Ruin of the Elector Palatine, and endanger'd that of the whole Proteſtant Intereſt in Germany. It is true, that after the Elector's Defeat at the Battle near Prague, King James us'd ſome faint Endeavours to relieve him, but they came to nothing; for it appears, by Ruſhworth's Collections, that the Spaniards had at that time Penſioners in our Court, who, with the Aſſiſtance of the High-Church and Prerogative Party, brought all into Confuſion, as the French have ſeveral times done by the ſame Methods the mean time the Parliament and Good England were very much offended at th betwixt our Court, the Emperor, and t Spain; and the Commons, to ſhew their
to the Proteſtant Cauſe, offer'd to ſta King with their Lives and Fortunes, for the Affairs of the Elector Palatine, and Proteſtants of Germany: But the Mer trary Principles and reſtleſs Paſſions prev the King to adjourn the Parliament, an Majeſty and them at variance about the tive. In purſuit of thoſe arbitrary M Proclamation was iſſu'd againſt Peoples State-Affairs, while at the ſame time the ply'd from Spain and Rome to enlarge hi to the Papiſts. How theſe things were by the Commons, we may find in R Collections; as alſo how K. Charles I. by the ſame Counſels, was divided from h ments, and made uncapable of giving Aſſiſtance to the Elector Palatine.

Countrym. I confeſs it is no wonder th

Power; when, beſides their other Con they were both of them favour'd by the
